Microsoft Word provides a feature that lets you search for text in a document. You can also use advanced settings to make the search more specific, such as matching cases, or ignoring punctuation. Here's to use it. Find text in a Word document To search for text in Word, you'll need to go to the Navigation pane. You can do this by selecting Find in the Edit group on the Home tab. An alternative way to accessing this pane is by using the Ctrl + F shortcut key on Windows or Command + F on mac. RELATED: Search for text inside any file by using Windows Search with the Navigation pane open, enter the text you want to find. The number of instances in which the text appears in the document will be displayed. You can navigate through search results by selecting the up and down arrows below the search box or by directly clicking the result snippet in the navigation pane. Setting Advanced Search Features The basic search function warning is that it doesn't take many things into account, that would be the case with letters in text. This is a problem if you're looking for a document that contains a lot of content, whether it's a book or a sentence. You can adjust these details by going to the Edit group on the Home tab by selecting the arrow next to Find and selecting Advanced Find from the drop-down list. The Find and Replace window appears. Select More. In the Search Options group, check the box next to the options you want to enable. Now, the next time you search for text in Word, will work with the selected complex options. RELATED: Microsoft Word: Format Document Document Abraham Lincoln was born on February 12, 1809, in Hardin, Kentucky. The family later moved to Indiana, where his mother died. Thomas remarried in 1818. Abraham grew up close enough to his stepmother, Sarah Bush Johnston, although his relationship with his father remained strained all his life. Lincoln married Mary Todd in November 1842. Together, the couple had four children. Abraham Lincoln, who worked as a lawyer, began his career in politics serving in the Illinois legislature. He became an American congressman in 1845. He made an unsuccessful offer to the U.S. Senate in 1858. Although he was defeated, he gained national recognition through his political debates with his opponent, incumbent Stephen Douglas. In 1861, Lincoln became the 16th president of the United States just before the divided nation entered the Civil War. He was president until April 15, 1865, when he was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth at the Fort Theatre. Print the Abraham Lincoln vocabulary sheet.
